At present, we are producing new products with intentions and development of the original that we have to develop the design in response to the use and variety to be an alternative for the designer. With this intention, we promise to create a great output product.

Our research and development (R&D) team creates new products inspired from combining between brass and natural material such as, stone and wood with simple and elegant form; moreover we always think about function and practical for user.

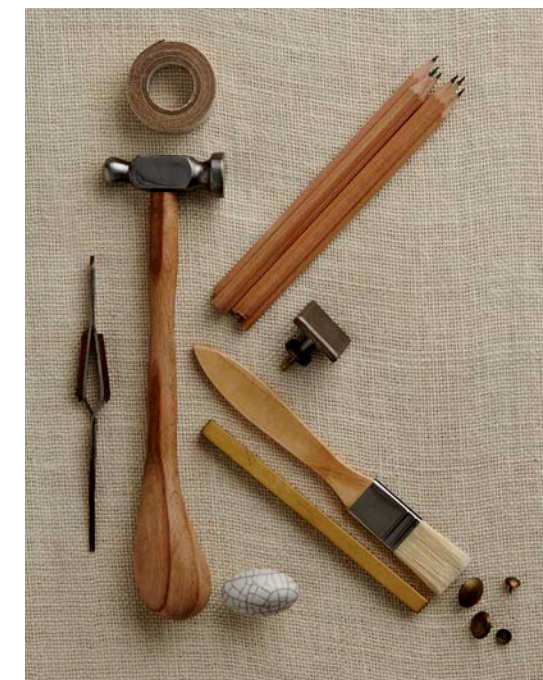

Most true works of art are created by hand because it is a matter of essence. They are sought-after and their shapes, materials and details strike a balance between new trends and tradition. Also, they are an extension of the character of those possessing them. They integrate mind, body, and spirit.

Art is a diverse range of human activities in creating visual, auditory or performing artifacts (artworks), expressing the author's imaginative or technical skill, intended to be appreciated for their beauty or emotional power. In their most general form, these activities include the production of works of art, the criticism of art, the study of the history of art, and the aesthetic dissemination of art.

The oldest documented forms of art are visual arts, which include creation of images or objects in fields including painting, sculpture, printmaking, photography, and other visual media. Architecture is often included as one of the visual arts; however, like the decorative arts, or advertising, it involves the creation of objects where the practical considerations of use are essential in a way that they usually are not in a painting, for example. Music, theatre, film, dance, and other performing arts, as well as literature and other media such as interactive media, are included in a broader definition of art or the arts. Until the 17th century, art referred to any skill or mastery and was not differentiated from crafts or sciences. In modern usage after the 17th century, where aesthetic considerations are paramount, the fine arts are separated and distinguished from acquired skills in general, such as the decorative or applied arts.

Art may be characterized in terms of mimesis (its representation of reality), expression, communication of emotion, or other qualities. During the Romantic period, art came to be seen as "a special faculty of the human mind to be classified with religion and science". Though the definition of what constitutes art is disputed and has changed over time, general descriptions mention an idea of imaginative or technical skill stemming from human agency and creation.

The nature of art, and related concepts such as creativity and interpretation, are explored in a branch of philosophy known as aesthetics.

"Creativity is to discover a question that has never been asked. If one brings up an idiosyncratic question, the answer he gives will necessarily be unique as well."

-Kenya Hara

"None at all," chimed in Lestrade.

Sherlock Holmes approached the body, and, kneeling down, examined it intently. "You are sure that there is no wound?" he asked, pointing to numerous gouts and splashes of blood which were all round.

"Positive!" cried both detectives.

"Then, of course, this blood belongs to a second individual—presumably the murderer, if murder has been committed. It reminds me of the circumstances attendant on the death of Van Stangerson, in Utrecht, in the year '34. Do you remember the case, Watson?"

"No, sir."

"Read it up—you really should. There is nothing new under the sun. It has all been done before."

As he spoke, his nimble fingers were flying here, there, and everywhere, feeling, pressing, unbuttoning, examining, while his eyes wore the same far-away expression which I have already marked upon. So swiftly was the examination made, that one could hardly have guessed the minuteness with which it was conducted. Finally, he sniffed the dead man's lips, and then turned at the soles of his patent leather boots.

"He has not been moved at all?" he asked.

"No more than was necessary for the purpose of our exam-beauty. "One other thing," he said. "Patent-leathers in the same cab, and they walked as friendly as possible—armed as they got inside, they walked up. Patent-leathers stood still while I own. I could read all that in the dust."

Light in the Darkness

"I said he won't make much of it. A man himself!" cried Lestrade, who had ascended the stairs and who now entered the room. The man generally marked his demeanour, wanting. His face was disturbed, his eyes were disarranged and untidy. He had the intention of consulting with Sherlock Holmes, his colleague he appeared to be, but he stood in the centre of the room, fumbling and uncertain what to do. "This is a case," he said at last—"a most incomprehensible case, Mr. Lestrade!" cried Lestrade. "I thought you would come to that conclusion," said the secretary, Mr. Joseph Stangerson, Mr. Joseph Stangerson," said Lestrade at Halliday's Private Hotel about grows. How came these two men—if there were an empty house? What has become of the cab? How could one man compel another to do so? Where did the blood come from? What was the murderer, since robbery had no part in it? How could a man's ring there? Above all, why should the second man use the German word RACHE before decamping? I

My companion smiled approvingly.

"You sum up the difficulties of the situation very well," he said. "There is much that is still obscure, but I have quite made up my mind on the main facts. Lestrade's discovery, it was simply a blind intention of the police upon a wrong track, by suggesting Socialism and societies. It was not done by a German. The A. was printed somewhat after the German fashion, but a German invariably prints in the Latin character, so I can safely say that this was not written by one, but by an imitator who overdid his part. It was simply a mistake in inquiry into a wrong channel. I'm not going to say more of the case, Doctor. You know a conjurer when once he has explained his trick; and if I explain much of my method of working, you will come to the conclusion that I am a very ordinary individual."

If you can't fly then run
If you can't run then walk
If you can't walk then crawl
But whatever you do you have to keep moving forward.
